Abel Heywood was born in Prestwich in 1810 to an impoverished family, his father died when Abel was only 5 year's old which resulted in Abel having a difficult childhood and receiving very little in the form of a formal education. At the age of 9 years old, he was employed by Thomas Worthington Warehouse in High Street, Manchester as an architects apprentice for the princely sum of 1s.6d (about 71/2 pence per week).

Despite his early back-ground, he would go on to become a very prominent figure in the local government of Manchester Council, becoming Mayor twice. He became only the third Freeman of the City and was one of the first from a humble back-ground. He also had a long and successful career as a newspaper distributor, publisher, printer and wallpaper manufacturer before dying in 1893 aged 83.

By the time he was 20, Heywood had opened a 'penny newsroom' and acquired the agency for the sale of the 'Poor Man's Guardian', a working man's newspaper which he sold for one penny. His editors refused to pay the stamp-duty which was then due on all newspapers, regarding it as a tax on knowledge which kept newspapers as the prerogative of the wealthy society. By 1832, Heywood had opened a shop in Oldham Street, Manchester selling his newspapers and was prosecuted several times for selling them illegally and served one, four month jail sentence for the offence. He came into conflict with the law again and again with accusations of selling material containing 'blasphemous' matter. He was involved in major radical causes of the time through his free press, including the crises around the cotton famine in 1860 and became a prominent fund-raiser for the people of Manchester, working tirelessly on the infrastructure of the sewage and paving systems and leading the construction of the tram and railway systems. The driving force behind his motivation was his early years spent in squalor which gave him an awareness of the needs of the City's poorest inhabitants.

His drive to make lives of the Manchester people and social reforms better continued throughout his life.

Due to his determination and reputation, he was appointed as Commissioner of Police in 1835 and later elected as a member of the New Manchester Corporation.

Meanwhile, he continued his newspaper sales and printing, opening his own paper mill in Stockport, publishing journals such as 'The Northern Star', 'Ben Brierley's Journal' and his own publication 'The Manchester Spectator'.
